

Summary of Teaching Evaluations

I have continuously attempted to reflect on feedback gathered from students, including through formal student evaluation reports as well as by soliciting informal feedback sessions during the semester. Earlier in my teaching career, I often tended to overprescribe reading material and made assumptions about students' abilities to grasp complex material without supplementary tools. Over time, I have worked on rectifying this by including short summaries of reading materials and explicitly mentioning takeaways, while also encouraging students to make organic connections and pathways based on their interests. Before such changes (in Sound Methods Spring 2024), one student had remarked, "Many people in the class had no idea what the purpose of this course was, and felt that we learned nothing." When I revised this course to teach it again in Fall 2025, I actively incorporated student feedback to revise and clarify assignment sheets, incorporated shorter reading materials; instead, I supplemented readings with more podcast-style stories, which both clarified the subject of sound studies—a primary conceptual goal of the course—but also served as examples for imagining students' final projects. Additionally, I signed up for workshops and sessions on pedagogical improvement, particularly centered around methods of continuous feedback gathering.

I incorporated the guide put together by Prof. Sandrine Schaefer, "Critique Repository Vol 1" to be used in courses that incorporate a culture of feedback giving and critique as a process of improving art or media products created by students. At the end of the Fall 2025 iteration of DCD 303–Sound Methods, a student remarked, "Dr. Eapen is really great at supporting student creativity and motivating growth. The readings provided in this class were somewhat challenging, but class discussions helped with my understanding. There was a lot of material to cover and not the most time, but I feel like the time that we did have was utilized well. I really enjoyed discussions with peers and developing our ideas together."

• He was nice • Knows what he is talking about and knows how to teach. • - good timely manner for assignments • He made the classroom a very relaxed and talkative environment, so that was really cool, along with just being a generally chill and relatable person • used class time well, and made it interesting • Enjoys his subject and has a great understanding of the content and can explain it well when prompted • Explaining the home assignments in class for better understanding • Very understanding and engaging with students. • Very informative and willing to explain the topics in different ways to help students really understand

Please identify the weaknesses of your instructor. -

- Grades were not put in efficiently, it wasn't until the week before finals when I knew what my standing grade was in the class.
- NA
- Feedback on assignments
- waiting to grade assignments until the last week of classes.
- Has difficulty keeping the course content engaging and entertaining
- The articles we would read in class, did not make much sense. we switched topics each week so I was a bit confused
- I don't really think he had any weaknesses, I really enjoyed everything that happened. In fact, I think he should call on people who never speak more often.
- - sometimes I wouldn't be able to understand some things he would say and I would need it explained better but I wouldn't get that explanation. - assignments still not graded from early on in the semester
- Does not grade assignments until the very end making it difficult for students to know how they are doing in the class.
- The course was confusing and not really beneficial
- Started putting grades in the week before finals
- - called out students on multiple occasion - gave unnecessary comments - all assignments could not be completed until discussed in class, giving students less than 24 hours to write a full essay or make a presentation

Feel free to comment on any other matter related to the teaching of this course or the course itself. -

- I loved this course and he was definitely one of my favorite professors this semester. He did a really good job.
- Have hard deadlines, most procrastinating students work better on hard deadlines and soft deadlines mean less likelihood of submitted assignments

- Gives numerous options on assignments so students can figure out their own strengths and weaknesses.
- Strengths include knowledge of technology and related technological matters.
- Uses his time wisely
- Helpful
- He was very good with making sure we are staying on schedule with our work
- knows what he is talking about
- - good communication skills
- it is clear that he cares about his students and how they perform in his class.
- Always prioritized the content of assignments and made sure we knew what we were supposed to be doing.
- wants to help and is open to hearing a students out.

Please identify the weaknesses of your instructor. -

- sometimes short.
- Sometimes I didn't understand the logistics of an assignment. (might have just been personal)
- being able to explain things in a way that most people can understand. it is more focused to a certain audience versus the general class
- He can sometimes come off snappy
- None
- Answering questions in a timely manner
- Weaknesses include a lack of enthusiasm and eagerness to start projects without fully fleshing out how they might play out.
- Cannot think of any.

Feel free to comment on any other matter related to the teaching of this course or the course itself. -

- The open-ended discussion setting of the course is different and challenged me and a few others. The professor was occasionally rude towards students when they were late or spoke their mind.
- This course really showed me different experiences using technology.
- Course was engaging and fun. I like the socratic seminar setup of the classroom.
- creative assignmrnts and fun projects.

- Passionate about the project the course was focused on working towards. Knowledgeable in his respective fields of study. Helped workshop any issues had in class / with assignments and projects.
- Knows how to use the full time
- He gives a helping hand and guides us through things we don't understand every effectively !
- - clearly wants students to succeed - offers a lot of support (though students don't take advantage of it a lot of the time) - give clear instructions and tasks, when students are confused he is able to clarify well and walk us through things
- always willing to see what you are doing and guide students to help them learn.
- always helped with work.

Please identify the weaknesses of your instructor. -

- none
- unclear instructions occasionally
- - The first half of the semester felt like it started off slow and then everything got really busy right at the end - classes in the beginning of the semester didn't feel very beneficial, it could be helpful to make more classes be more hands-on with project work, readings or supplemental sources that are assigned for homework should be brief to allow for more time working directly on the project
- Answering and grading in a timely manner
- Did not use class time to the best advantage in my opinion... I felt like we could have had more time to focus on our projects/assignments that couldn't be done at home (for example the video editing) compared to working on our coding projects in the class (which could have been done at home).

Feel free to comment on any other matter related to the teaching of this course or the course itself. -

- As much as I hate it, I feel like this course didn't live up to the other DCD 300 courses that have been taught previously. Rather than having the ability to create projects that I would want to feature in my final DCD portfolio, we had to create projects for a broader project that none of us really knew anything about prior to this course and will more than likely not keep up with. I feel like this course tried to teach us so many great skills but just did not have the correct amount of time to really hone those skills (examples: video editing, coding, 3D printing, etc...). I hate to say this but, this course felt like it was taking up so much of my time and energy while not leaving me with any satisfaction. If this course topic was to be taught/used again, I think it would be smart to let students pick/be assigned a specific role rather than everyone being forced to do things that just simply are not meant for them while being critiqued as if they are professionals. We are not professionals, most of us won't go into a career that has all these aspects of web-design, video-editing, 3D-printing, coding, social media marketing, research, etc. It would have went better had we had more creative freedom to choose our own projects rather than be assigned projects that had to do with a larger project most of us are not familiar enough with. Just disappointed that I didn't get the DCD 300 experience that I had wanted, especially because it's the last DCD class I have to take before the capstone.

- always professional, gave good feedback on my work
- Dr. Eapen is really great at supporting student creativity and motivating growth. The readings provided in this class were somewhat challenging, but class discussions helped with my understanding. There was a lot of material to cover and not the most time, but I feel like the time that we did have was utilized well. I really enjoyed discussions with peers and developing our ideas together.
- N/A
- Responsive, respectful, understanding, reasonable.
- - very helpful when students are stuck/confused - provides good support - knows a lot about audition and sound editing and is able to teach/show how to use the platform
- He cared about class time and did a good job at helping us use our skills for the final.

Please identify the weaknesses of your instructor. -

- The only thing I can really think of is blueberry in class there was a few exercises that felt a little unnecessary.
- sometimes the time spent in class doesn't feel as beneficial as working on something for the class on my own time. For example, spending only 15-20 minutes discussing a reading/podcast and having the rest of the time be work time, or discussing the critique workbook for 10-15 minutes and then doing the critique all in one class rather than 2
- Class time felt unproductive at times.
- The readings and lectures don't seem to line up with the projects we're doing in class, so it's hard to see how they relate.
- It feels like Dr. Eapen has really high expectations of his students, which is both flattering and stressful. There was a lot of freedom in this class, which allowed for student creativity to blossom, but it felt like there was a bit of a lack of structure. Some of it would be students not taking accountability for their work in a timely manner, but there could also have been more check-ins or due dates. I.e., "Have at least 2 minutes edited by this date" to help keep everybody on track.

Feel free to comment on any other matter related to the teaching of this course or the course itself. -

- Partially due to my own expectations and the perceived expectations of the assignment, I struggled to commit fully to my assignments. I really wanted to create a good project that I could put into my portfolio. The part that I really struggled with was making sure that my project covered multiple aspects of my topic, not just the media or the main theme. I didn't want it to be flat or one-dimensional. However, I don't think writing is my strong suit. Oh well. I really enjoyed the practice and getting to explore a topic that interests me in a new medium. It would have been nice to have more practice with the software in class, but I understand that there were time constraints. Most of us had Adobe experience anyway, so it was fairly easy to pick up. All-in-all, I really enjoyed diving into the world of sound studies in this course.
- N/A
- I wish the course focused more on technical aspects of recording and editing, rather than leaving most of the software experimentation up to the student outside of class.
- I think more in-class work time for the project would be beneficial, I felt like we only had in class time towards the end of the semester and i felt like i was behind on everything. I think Dr. Eapen does a great job teaching this course and I think he will do well with it in the future too!
- I like the course in general, though it was a lot of fun and I like that he let us be creative with our final

- classroom engagement
- Knowledgeable on social media algorithms, lots of good insight. Great personality!
- Professor Eapen is very knowledgeable and promotes a comfortable and calm environment. The materials we read and watched were very interesting and important for us to know, and all tied together, which I enjoyed. Always able to give constructive criticism and helpful feedback.
- My professor is very nice, and he genuinely cares about his students and wants them to learn and do well. He gives very good feedback.
- very respectful class is engaging asks a lot of good hard thinking questions

- Sometimes I felt like our work seemed like busy work. The assignments were usually interesting; it was just painful to force yourself to do.
- Class did drag on for a while during unnecessary discussions or forced repetitive answers from students.
- Lots of just reading and in class discussion, class felt lengthy and repetitive sometimes.

Feel free to comment on any other matter related to the teaching of this course or the course itself. -

- I would have enjoyed more content creation assignments for a social media course.
- more hands on work

- takes too long to grade assignments
- just not at all what the course description described it as
- In class, his lectures felt repetitive. Every day, we would go over a reading, run through a PowerPoint, and then leave. We as students would go over the readings as a class before lectures, which was confusing for me when I didn't fully understand the assigned reading the day before. He also has assignments due at 5 pm, which is an odd time to complete something compared to the standard 11:59 pm.

- This course is a waste of time and money, I had to take this class or something similar to it, to satisfy a requirement for my major but It provides no value to the degree I'm pursuing. Stop making students take courses that aren't relevant to their major.

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing this letter in support of Dr. Gayas Eapen's teaching effectiveness based on my observation of his DCD 303 course, "Sound & Motion Methods: Sonic Storytelling," on September 23, 2025. As a colleague in the Department of English, I have been fortunate enough to have had many discussions with Dr. Eapen about theory and culture, so I was eager to see how these concerns were translated into his teaching for the Digital Culture and Design program.

Before discussing my classroom observation, I want to commend Dr. Eapen for the thoughtful design of this course. The syllabus he provided prior to my observation demonstrates a sophisticated understanding of sound studies as both a technical discipline and a humanities inquiry. The course successfully bridges multiple fields—ethnomusicology, digital media production, cultural studies, and critical theory—while maintaining clear, achievable learning objectives. In short, it is the kind of course our students are lucky to take!

On the day of my observation, Dr. Eapen was already in the room having a discussion with students. The rapport between the class and Dr. Eapen was obvious. As class began, the students engaged in a close listening exercise focused on episodes from the Ways of Knowing podcast, specifically episodes from the second season, "Cosmic Visions." This podcast series, produced in collaboration with Johns Hopkins University, explores the history of how we've conceptualized "the cosmos" over the centuries. The choice of this particular text was pedagogically astute—it allowed students to examine how audio storytelling functions in science communication while considering the epistemological dimensions of how we come to know the space we inhabit.

Dr. Eapen began the session by playing excerpts from the podcast and urged students to pay close attention to elements that go into producing the episode's narrative. While the class was small, it was perfect for this kind of learning experience. Throughout the class, each student remained engaged and involved in the dialogue. It was clear that Dr. Eapen created a learning environment where students knew they were active meaning-makers rather than passive recipients of information. The discussion that emerged was remarkably sophisticated, with students commenting on the use of ambient sound, the pacing of narration, the integration of interview clips, and the strategic deployment of silence—all elements that could go unnoticed in a passive listening experience.

A pivotal moment in the discussion, for me, came when one student asked, "Is this music or sound?" This seemingly simple question could have been dismissed or answered perfunctorily, but Dr. Eapen recognized it as an opportunity for deeper exploration. He turned the question back to the class, asking them to consider what distinction they were drawing and why it mattered. The ensuing conversation touched on issues of intentionality, composition, cultural context, and the phenomenology of listening. Students debated whether the ambient recordings constituted "found sound" or whether their careful placement in the podcast elevated them to something closer to music. Dr. Eapen then guided them toward understanding that this very ambiguity is central to contemporary sound studies—that the boundaries between music, sound, and noise are culturally constructed and methodologically significant.

Following the close listening discussion, Dr. Eapen transitioned the class into a hands-on scripting exercise. Students were asked to draft the introduction to their own podcast episodes for the Sound Stories Final Project. The immediate shift from analysis to production was pedagogically effective; students could apply the analytical frameworks they had just discussed to their own creative work while it was still fresh on their minds. It was a well-balanced class that worked through theory and practice in ways that were both rigorous and comfortable.

It was my pleasure to see Dr. Eapen teach for the Digital Culture and Design program. He clearly brings much to the program and to the university's broader mission of innovative, interdisciplinary education.

Sincerely,
